STRUGGLING WITH BEHAVIORS IS IT SENSORY OR IS IT BEHAVIOR

Sensory

- seeks/avoids/craves sensory input throughout the day that interferes with their ability to participate
- they seem out of control, don't care about your reaction or their surroundings
- seek control of others and their environment in order to feel in control of themselves

Behavior

- seeks/avoids activities in an attempt to gain positive or negative attention
- they are in control of the behavior. It is a choice, an attempt to manipulate the situation
- the behavior ends abruptly when they get what they want

Whether it's Sensory or Behavioral, both have an underlying cause. Occupational Therapy can help identify the Neurobiological cause and provide evidence based intervention to help your child live their best life.
